

Very briefly, as a FWD user and supporter, I would like to state that I fully support letting this service (which does not touch the public phone network) remain unregulated. We have so few choices these days for any type of real-time voice communications, I feel it's important to let this sector grow on it's own, mature, and then be revisited. Regulating it this early on would likely kill a new, exciting, and revolutionary means of communications.

Please don't let the incumbent players that have a vested interest in regulating this upstart into oblivion have their way. Let the American Public have their chance at more choices.

Thanks
